Monthly Archives: January 2022

Art in the style of Salvador Dali

Posted on 31st January 2022 by Mrs Lowe

I am really interested in the children's art work based on Salvador Dali's surrealism. I wonder how many 'normal' art design things you will notice in his artwork?

Looking at the legend of time, Mrs Tait has been a favourite of his clocks. Let's be on the other clocks like shortcuts, tiny silhouettes of people, insects, rocks and anything breakfast.

Look how Jeremy Oliver has incorporated musical instruments into his picture below.

Look very closely at all the little details that make the following picture 'surreal' – love it!

Look how Noah has been inspired by Dali's clocks and has incorporated them into his own picture. The eye, the moustache and even the clocks are shown up on hooks.

STEM Challenge 1: Paper Table Challenge

Posted on 31st January 2022 by Mrs Lowe

This afternoon, we started our STEM learning.

STEM learning means educating in the specific areas: Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics.

Our challenge was to design and build a table that would hold a glue stick. The table had to be made from paper and we were only allowed to use 1 sheet of A4 paper, glue and scissors.

The key rules to follow for following rule:

- The table must have legs and a top
- The glue stick must stay on the table by itself for 10 seconds
- The winning group would be the one that has the glue stick the highest off the ground
- We will not measure design and make on video

Some designs were very successful, whereas others...well 'It leave it there!

Art Week - Day 2

Posted on 31st January 2022 by Mrs Lowe

Each classroom we usually decorate with long, multi-printed tags and carry through a theme for the week. These elegantly represent the house and year group names of each class.

Today, we had our own Chalk Hand Art. Here are a few examples:

Art Week - Day 2

Posted on 2 January 2019 by Jonathan Green in Memories with 0 Comment

One of Salvador Dali's most famous paintings was 'The Persistence of Memory' (also known as melting clocks). We started it to make us think about the passing of time, our memories and dreams.

We spent a long time discussing what we could see, what was strange/surreal about it, the colours and how it made us feel.

We then had a go at recreating the melting clocks in our sketch books. Here are a couple of examples:

Art Week - Day 1

Posted on 2 January 2019 by Jonathan Green in Memories with 0 Comment

For art week, our artist is Salvador Dali whose style is surrealism. Surrealist means 'beyond reality'. Surrealist art is an expression of dreams and the unreal rather than something that is true and rational.

Dali's appearance was often an art performance in itself and his moustaches were his talk of the town. They were flamboyant, and were worn in a variety of shapes and sizes, sometimes even decorated with flowers.

We sketched portraits of Dali and had fun creating different styles for his moustache, using black pipe cleaners.

Freddie Fit - January

Posted on 2 January 2019 by Jonathan Green in Memories with 0 Comment

Always a great start to a new term.

Star Award

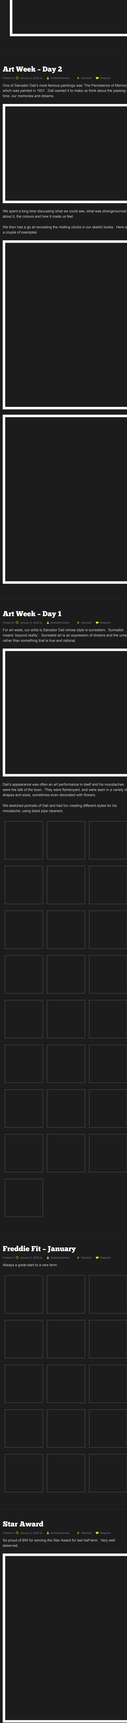
Posted on 2 January 2019 by Jonathan Green in Memories with 0 Comment


So proud of Will for winning the Star Award for last half term. Very well deserved.